"quiet please"

To many architects and designers who have confined their work to contemporary expression the choice has resulted in frequent frustrations and often in Spartan living. Happily this state of affairs is on the wane; the vigor of Twentieth Century design cannot be denied nor the importance of its growing acceptance minimized. It is one of the most encouraging notes in the chaotic and hazardous world conditions of today.

Modern design as we now view it had as its instigator the industrial revolution of a century ago. Since that time architecture, furnishings, and other phases of utilitarian art have experienced their separate and various growing pains, sometimes with ludicrous moments, but always with the common underlying philosophy of an art which impels rather than follows, which is based on man's needs rather than on current vogue. The absorption of the home craftsman by industry has widened the influence of the professional upon a small select group to one encompassing a majority of the population. Never before has the designer been endowed with so much responsibility—a responsibility which is justifying itself as evidenced by the many excellent designs being created today—designs reflecting sensitivity to the social, moral, and aesthetic values as well as to those of simple creature comfort.

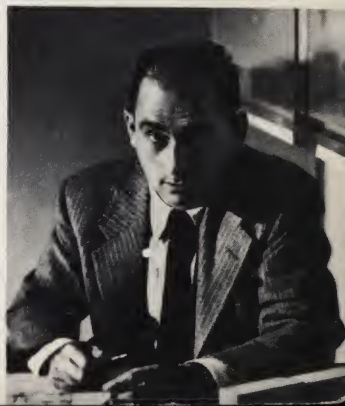

That contemporary design—even the more advanced employing new materials, methods, and uninhibited approaches—is now being produced in commercial quantities should be a source of much inner satisfaction, garnished with economic stability, to the early pioneers. But it is even more gratifying as an indication that some optimism might be expressed for the survival of our civilization. A people which produce virile, creative art and utilize it in daily living dispel any fear of decadence. This utilization while still minimum exemplifies a growing acceptance of new solutions to old problems, an escape from traditional bog, an awareness of reality and a personal reaction to its social responsibilities. Only through a more universal acceptance of new approaches will the world old problems—complex as they have become—find a solution. Perhaps by the same mental processes; the evolution of a log into an Eames chair will find its counterpart in the growth of a truly functional United Nations which will satisfactorily solve these problems to allow for the continuation of Homo sapiens and the works which they create.

personalities in design

RUTH ADLER is well qualified to produce the fabric designs which appear on Page 3, Section 4, having started her training under Paul Klee with the 'Bauhaus' at the remarkable age of 4. This early instruction was due to her family's personal friendship with Paul Klee and their own activities at the Academy in Duesseldorf, Germany. Miss Adler travelled extensively in Europe during the 30's and received schooling at Lausanne, Switzerland. In 1942 she was granted a 4 year scholarship from the Carnegie Institute of Technology to Brown University and the Rhode Island School of Design, majoring in architecture. She has been very actively engaged in instructing Architectural and Industrial Design at Michigan State College, architectural designing with Raymond Loewy Associates, lecturing at various universities, and in winning competitions; among them: Cranbrook Design Award 1946, Chicago Tribune's "Better Homes for Better Living" 1947, American Institute of Decorators' Award 1948. Miss Adler opened her own workshop in 1947 devoted to the designing and hand-screening of contemporary textiles; all designs being abstract and inspired and named after the objects around us. It may be unnecessary to add that special discounts are given to architects.

T. H. ROBSJOHN-GIBBINGS has been part of the American furniture scene since 1929. During the past 19 years he has been responsible for innovations which have since become a basic part of contemporary American interiors. In opposition to the avant garde theorists who have made a cult of functionalism, at the expense of good design, Robsjohn-Gibbings has created interiors in which visual serenity is combined with practical furniture of comfort and quality. In addition to his interior and furniture designing, Robsjohn-Gibbings is author of two witty and intelligent books, "Good-bye, Mr. Chippendale," a challenge to the antique collecting world, which immediately became a best seller in 1944, and "Mona Lisa's Mustache," a book on modern art published in 1947 and now in its fourth large printing.

GEORGE NELSON, whose work appears from Pages H5 through H9 in Section 1, is architect turned furniture designer by his frustrations in finding suitable furnishings for the houses which he designed. Educated at Yale, he won the Rome Prize in architecture in 1932 while doing postgraduate work at Catholic University.

Two years were spent in Europe travelling, studying, and interviewing the outstanding modern architects of that continent. The latter resulted in the publishing of twelve articles which attracted the attention of the publisher of the Architectural Forum where he became a member of the staff. He has since collaborated on the writing of a book "Tomorrow's House," written an article on furniture design published by Fortune magazine, and has recently joined the staff of Interior magazine.

Mr. Nelson retains an office in New York City which is currently engaged in the design of showrooms, office interiors, houses, a variety of products, graphic arts (of which the recently published book "The Herman Miller Collection" is an example), and is doing research in lightweight demountable structures. This latter promises to introduce a revolutionary vacation home besides having many other applications.

In summary, Mr. Nelson appears to be a specialist of unspecialized activity, all of his varied activities resulting in products of par excellence at the expense of none.

NANCY WICKHAM, whose exciting ceramics are shown on Page 3, Section 5, feels that "people will buy good things if they are made available" and proves it by staying up nights producing and spending her days selling her wares to enthusiastic customers in her own studio.

JAMES PRESTINI produces the remarkable woodenware on Page 1, Section 5. He has been Research Designer for Armour Research Foundation since 1943 and is a member of one of the six teams selected and subsidized by the Museum of Modern Art to do research in Low-Cost Furniture Competition.

GRETA MAGNUSSON GROSSMAN is a well known furniture designer and instructor in addition to her lamp designing appearing on Page 3, Section 2. An early supplement of this magazine will introduce her excellent custom designs and her new line of furniture being produced by a Los Angeles manufacturer.

FRANZ BERGMANN'S ceramics which appear on Page 2, Section 5, have a witty and entertaining note as well as being beautifully executed, perhaps a result of two years of philosophy and psychology at the University of Vienna. Mr. Bergmann is also well known for his water colors, oil paintings, and murals.

WILLIAM ARMBRUSTER, designer of furniture appearing on Page E1 and E2 of Section 1, is another architect turned furniture designer. His work was inspired by the need of compromise between heavy, unattractive, commercial furniture and that being produced for home use. We think that his compromise has resulted in the most desirable features of both.

FURNITURE FORUM is published to acquaint you with the activities taking place in contemporary furniture and accessory design and to present sufficient information to enable its use as a working handbook for architects, interior designers and home decorators. It is designed in loose leaf form to allow for the addition of quarterly supplements by which we hope to eventually provide you with complete cataloging of the furniture being produced by the more advanced manufacturers. Other sections to be introduced in future supplements will include Custom Work, Radio, Foreign, Shop and Office Furnishings, Floor Coverings, Integrated Interiors.
